The New Charlie Banana Fashion Collection Features Art by Matthew Langille ~Plus~ #Giveaway (10/7)

September 28, 2011 By admin 91 Comments

There have been some recent trends in the world of cloth diapering and one of them is custom designed artwork for diapers. It is a trend I am enjoying, because it not only brings more variety to the cloth diapering world, but it is proof that cloth diapers are hip, progressive and a work of art. Even the printed characters and designs on disposables can't touch that. It is the opposite of the preconceptions many non-cloth diaper users have about the current cloth diaper choices on the market.

While I was at the ABC Kids Expo it was fantastic to meet so many moms in the mother's room (mainly retailers shopping for their stores) that were actually already cloth users, but I also had the chance to chat with one particular mom about cloth diapers. She was accompanying her parents along with her brand new baby to shop for their retail store. She had no idea how easy, different, modern and adorable cloth diapers were today and I had just changed my little guy's diaper and she caught sight of the Charlie Banana BlackBeary One Sized diaper and she was taken back by what she saw.

After giving her my plug that they should consider carrying cloth diapers in their store and if not that she should get some for her new daughter, I continued on my way through the busy expo. I had that great feeling the rest of the day that you feel when you've helped change someone's conception about someone and possibly saved them thousands of dollars. All because I changed a diaper.
